THE RED CROSS SPEAKS

The Red Cross Chapter here in Bethel, has occasion for rejoicing this year because of the generous response to its appeals. We have secured 101 memberships, which is almost a 50 per cent increase over last year, which is most gratifying.

The appeal for clothing and food also met with a hearty response. These things sent in have been sorted and classified as well as possible and the committee wishes to give notice that on Saturday afternoons between the hours of two and four they will be at the Red Cross Rooms and will, to the best of their ability, allot these things to the worthy.

It is more than likely that the Scouts missed some of the bags when they were making the collection; and we know that many of the bags are still out, for out of nearly 200 distributed only about 100 were returned.

If you have one of these bags will you be kind enough to notify L. A. Edwards or Mrs. Datzell and they will be called for. We can't afford to lose them for they cost good Red Cross money.

Thanking you all most heartily for your cooperation with us in our efforts to serve our worthy poor. We are sincerely,

Your Red Cross Committee.

BETHEL'S TRACTOR AND PLOW HERE

New Snow Removal Equipment Arrived This Morning—To Be Set Up at Once.

The town's new Caterpillar 50 tractor with LaPlant-Choate plow arrived at the station this morning, and men are expected this afternoon to unload and set up the new machinery. This equipment is the latest in the snow removal line, being far ahead of the old tractor and plow which have served this town, and several others much of the time, for the past six winters.

The old plow and tractor will now be turned over to the tractor concern toward the cost of the new outfit.

GIRL SCOUTS

The Girl Scouts met Dec. 4, at the home of Mrs. S. S. Greenleaf. Sixteen members were present.

Patrols and their leaders held group discussions for names for the Patrols and to choose their seconds.

The Patrol leaders instructed the various patrols in the tying of knots and whipping the ends of rope.

Games were played, adding much enjoyment to the meeting.

The Court of Honor held its session after the Patrols were dismissed. The following names were chosen for the Patrols: "The Maple Leaf," "The Morning Star," "The Pine Cone," and "The Lark."

MRS. NELLIE CROSS

The many friends of Mrs. Nellie Cross, widow of the late Charles Cross, were grieved to hear of her death at Locke Mills, Friday, Dec. 5. Although she had been in failing health for the past few years she was able to attend to her many duties up to the last minute, the end coming suddenly.

Mrs. Cross was born at Sebago, Maine, Sept. 22, 1861, the daughter of the late Lydia West and Horace Garey, she being the youngest member of a family of four. In 1877 she married Charles Kimball Cross and to this union three children were born: William, who passed away in July, 1933; Mae, who resides in Arlington, Mass., and Annie who passed away in October, 1932.

In the passing of Mrs. Cross, the community loses one of its best citizens and neighbors, she being always ready to lend a helping hand to anyone in need. She will forever remain in the hearts of all who knew her as a woman of strong integrity, as

UPTON 4-H REORGANIZES

The Happy 4-H Club of Upton met at the home of the local leader, December 9, and made plans for the new year. The secretary's report was read. Seven members responded to the roll call. It was voted to frame the 4-H Club charter and hang it in the Grange Hall. It was voted to hang Christmas gifts on the community tree. Officers were elected for the new year.

NEWRY

GOULD EKES OUT 23-22 WIN OVER GORHAM

Dwyer Pulls Game Out of Fire Tuesday Evening—Exciting Game But Poorly Played.

Dwyer's sensational shooting in the third period and Berry's free throw in the final minute of play is all that saved the "Blue and Gold" from tasting defeat in its first school boys game of the season. Fans could wish for nothing better in excitement as Gould started its uphill climb in the third period after trailing 14-6 at the half time. It was in this period when Gould showed its only spark of good basketball and coupled with Dwyer's fine shooting went into a 21-18 lead.

In the beginning of the final period Allen was fouled out of the game as was also Dwyer. From then on the tenseness of the situation kept all spectators on the edge of their seats.

With these men out Gorham staged its second rally of the evening and tied the score 22-22. With less than two minutes to go Berry was fouled and amid an uproar sank the winning point. Gorham had an opportunity to tie the count but the free throw went amiss and also Gorham's chances of winning. Gorham lost its best chance of taking Gould Academy for the first time in basketball history by its inability to sink free throws. They had 17 chances and only made two of them good while the winners made five out of 11.

WITH THE POETS

CHRISTMAS
Edna M. Shaw.

Hush! all this world's tumult.
Search deep within your soul.
Let Christ be born in you to-day.
As He was born of old.

Dream o'er the wondrous story.
The shepherds' watchful care.
The stars so bright, the heavenly night.
And the angels singing there.

The wise men ever faithful
As wise men ever true.
Hearing God's voice of peace and love.
They followed the guiding star.

They gave to Him their treasures
In that humble dwelling place.
They heard not Herod's sinful call.
But kept the Christ child safe.

The glory of that night divine
Shines now for you and me.
The angels' song, "Fear not my child,"
Rings on eternally.

I am your God forever near
If you listen for my voice.
Your earthly woes will soon depart.
As you with Christ rejoice.

The Fourth Lovely Lady

By THERESE BENSON

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Following the splendid wedding of her niece, Clara, to Lord Lester, which she has arranged, Lady Smith Lovely ("Smif") by her own insistence, youngest and physically the wealthiest of the four lovely sisters, finds herself in decidedly straitened circumstances. She has her own plans for the future, however, which she refuses to disclose to her sisters, prominent figures in New York society.

CHAPTER II.—The historic Lovelyston, Vermont, in which the Lovelystons have lived for generations, is financially unable to maintain its position there. As a "Lovely Lady," she is living in Chile, while the estate is rented to a Mr. Johnstone Nesbitt. Smif's dearest wish is to see her brother, to which she feels her brother will not return.

CHAPTER III.—Under the name "Madame Saitou," Smif establishes herself as a "Little Sister" of the "Gilded Age." The business she is conducting is remunerative, but her sister's disapproval of her "adventures" is expressed in a letter.

CHAPTER IV.—Smif has a client, a man (she does not require her name to give her name) who desires to evade the law by purchasing an extraordinary stout lady, his sister, whom he refers to as "Mrs. Washington McCreedy (Mrs. McCreedy)." Her story is that of a woman of great wealth who has lost her lover, "Johnny," and is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency."

CHAPTER V.—On his next visit, the man who has been discovered by Smif as the brother of her brother, is himself recognized by her as the brother of her brother. She is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency."

CHAPTER VI.—Born abroad, but of American parents, "Smif" is a "made" woman. She is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency."

CHAPTER VII.—Smif's "reducing" is a success. She is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency."

CHAPTER VIII.—Mercedes paid the second instalment of the ten thousand dollars. She is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency."

CHAPTER IX.—The woman actually appeared to Smif as a "good looking" girl. She is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency."

CHAPTER X.—The woman actually appeared to Smif as a "good looking" girl. She is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency."

CHAPTER XI.—The woman actually appeared to Smif as a "good looking" girl. She is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency."

CHAPTER XII.—The woman actually appeared to Smif as a "good looking" girl. She is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency."

CHAPTER XIII.—The woman actually appeared to Smif as a "good looking" girl. She is now in a state of "despondency." Smif recognizes her as the sister of her brother, and she is now in a state of "despondency."

"I'm on my way to town. Don't go out till I get there. I must see you. Promise me you won't go out. And, oh, Smif, try to see me at once. My nerves are all shot."

"What is the matter?" Smif asked sharply. "Of course I'll see you—but what's wrong?"

The phone was dead. Instantly on receiving her promise Pam had hung up.

When the girl arrived looking white and strained, her hair straggling out from beneath her smart hat, the first thing Smif asked was: "Tell me—have you killed anyone?"

"No," Pam answered. "I wish I had. I only slapped the fool's face. Like an angel, give me a cigarette while I pull myself together."

"Let's have it, Pam. I doubt if it's as bad as you think it is," Smif suggested gently.

Pam drew a deep and audible breath. "I'm being blackmailed," she said succinctly.

That was something she had not expected, yet Smif never winced. "What form has the blackmail taken?" she inquired.

"A demand for two hundred thousand dollars," Pam answered. "Which, of course, not being of age, I haven't got."

"Give me all the details, Pam, and don't look so desperate."

"I feel desperate," the girl said with a painful gulp. "I feel soiled, as if I'd really done something disgraceful the moment my mother's back was turned. But honestly, I've done nothing, Smif."

"You don't have to tell me that," Smif replied. "Don't I know you?"

At this the girl began to cry, childish tears of relaxed tension. "You're a brick, Smif. I might have known you'd stand by me, you are always such a rock to lean on."

She wiped her eyes determinedly and sat forward in her chair. "Now listen," she said. "I'll try to tell you everything exactly as it happened, and you'll be able to see if I'm to blame in any way. I'd been looking around for something to do. I can draw a little, and Cousin Carol suggested that I might be able to do miniatures, copying from photographs, you understand. Mother then remarked that she would love to have a good copy of a miniature of one of the Phelps ancestors. Father has the original. I was feeling pretty mucky about mother because she had consented to let me stay at home, and I determined to copy it for her, and if I didn't succeed, I'd have some one else do it as a surprise, understand?"

"I wanted to take some lessons, thinking that a teacher would be able to correct my drawing, keep me up to the mark generally and solve the difficulties I was bound to have with a medium that was new to me. Cousin Carol, it turned out, had heard of exactly the right person. This was a Monsieur Mabuse, a Belgian refugee who had first gone to England with his old mother. When she died, he came here and, not having the right introductions, had not been very successful. Also, he had married, had a sweet little wife, and three babies. These expenses had made it necessary for him to give lessons, although naturally he was nothing short of a genius and Cousin Carol appeared to consider it a great condescension on his part."

"Cousin Carol seems to play quite a part in this tale," Smif remarked dryly.

Pamela recoiled. "It would be terrible to suspect her," she said tremblingly. "She's my own cousin. Anyhow, even before father and mother sailed, I began to take lessons. Monsieur Mabuse had a little studio in his house. I had been asked if I wanted private lessons, which were more expensive, and Cousin Carol, who went with me to introduce me, at once said that they would be advisable. I didn't want that. I wanted to do my own work as I could unaided, and I thought I could learn something too from watching the other pupils, so I said I would prefer to go into a class. Cousin Carol didn't like that at all. Against her determined opposition, I insisted on having my own way. I paid a class of three. One was a man, a rather nice fellow, and another was a Jew, but with talent, I thought. Another girl besides me. They didn't always come, except just at last. Her wife and the children wandered in now and then, and it seemed that the old est child, a boy named Eugene, was crazy about automobiles. So, on particularly fine days, I suggested that Monsieur Mabuse should take Madame Mabuse and the children for a drive in the park instead of waiting for me. After that, they were always standing about waiting when I arrived, and it seemed a little to do for them, that it became a regular custom. Now, however, I told you everything. No, I never painted one other still. Madame Mabuse is French. Her husband begged me to speak French with him, since he so seldom heard the language he was losing all ability in speaking it. He said his Trade understood it but dared not speak it because of an atrocious accent.

"It Would Be Terrible to Suspect Her. She's My Own Cousin."

"That was all, up to yesterday. There were no other pupils in the studio when I arrived. Madame Mabuse and the children went out as usual in his car and for about half an hour I worked without speaking to the man, who stood by the window looking down at the street. Happening to look up, I caught him consulting his wrist watch, a cheap thing that I had bought for Monsieur Mabuse's son but gave to him when he visited that he had no way to tell when his classes should end."

"I think, now that he got leg wife and everything carefully noted. At all events, I consulted my own watch and found that I had at least half an hour more, but decided that if for any reason he was in a hurry I had better get by criticism over with."

"I asked him to look at what I had done. He dived on one picture or another for about ten minutes. At last he came over to me and put his hand on my shoulder that was farther from him. That is, his arm was across the back of my neck. It made me furious, Smif. He had not touched even my fingers before. I shook him off and sprang to my feet, saying something like: 'How dare you? Take your hand away.' And then, just as the door was opened and his wife and two men appeared on the threshold, he grabbed hold of me and began to sputter out in English which he had never talked with me before. Glad he was that I loved him, how proud and happy I had made him, and what do you do?" asked Smif.

"I slapped his face, just as hard as I could, picked up my miniatures, the original and the finished copy, and my paints, dashed out and drove home. I was simply burning up with rage. That day little rat to dare to lay his hand on me! I thought of coming to you, but something warned me that I would be sure to be at home on time. I had doubts of Cousin Carol. And Smif, she was there waiting for me, which was most unusual. The you think my cousin could be so concerned to frame up a thing like that?"

"Probably not," Smif said with the intention of catching the girl. "I presume you have her no still 'netting'?"

"Naturally not," Pam assured her. "I had plenty of them to cool off on the way home. Yet the whole affair was so perfectly planned that I was convinced I hadn't heard the end of it, and was right. This morning a man called me on the phone, said he represented Madame Mabuse and that she did not wish to embarrass me by publicity of a suit for alienation of affection. She however had her children to consider. Loss of their father meant loss of their sole support, and there were three little ones to feed and educate. In fine, she was prepared to settle out of court for two hundred thousand dollars."

"And then what?"

"I said I could not make out what he was talking about, that the connection was bad, that I was leaving for town on the instant and had no time to bother with trifles and that they had better see you. I knew if anyone could save me you could."

"God bless you, darling," said Smif. "The first move, my child, is for you to move yourself away from here. We don't want those crooks to find us in another conversation."

"I can't go away," cried Pam, aghast. "I'd go crazy, not knowing what has happened, and I don't want you to call me the Maniac. There's an extension in my room but anyone can listen in as over the house."

Smif pulled on this. If Mrs. Mason were really mixed up in the affair it was doubly important to keep Pam's mind up, and she could sympathize with the girl's anxiety.

"As a matter of fact, nothing will happen today," she said at length. "These people, or one of them, will come here and state their case. This attempt of theirs is outside the law. I think it's called the 'litter game' and is usually put up on a man with an outraged husband coming in opportunely. Anyhow, go now."

OXFORD COUNTY LEADS IN 4-H PROJECTS

Lester H. Shibles, state 4-H club leader, in summarizing results of the year just completed says, "Oxford County held the top place with 1,036 projects enrolled." Penobscot next with 927; and Waldo third with 822. State increase over 1932 was $53, 279 more in Aroostook County. Penobscot, Somerset, Knox-Lincoln, Oxford, and York each had an increase of over a hundred. All of these figures are the greatest ever except in a few instances during the last year of the World War.

STATE 4-H CLUB CONTEST
DECEMBER 25-30

The twentieth annual state 4-H club contest will be held December 25, 29 and 30 at the University of Maine, Orono. Oxford County champions (seniors) and 4-H club leaders are now planning to attend the biggest and best 4-H club event of the year.

At the annual get-together, on Thursday night, each county will answer the roll call with a song or cheer. The program will include a reception, an evening of games and stunts, a meeting of the Maine State Association of 4-H Club Leaders, a tour of the campus, a banquet, and the final assembly at which the State Champions will be announced and prizes awarded.

Go wherever we may we are sure to encounter the crumbling ruins of structures that should be standing monuments to man's enterprise; but instead lie in ruins, mute reminders of man's folly.

Jesus graphically describes the wisdom of building upon a rock and the folly of building upon the sand; but in spite of these admonitions of the master and the screaming testimony of experience many of us go on doing that very thing.

EAST BETHEL 4-H CLUB

The Snappy Eight 4-H Potato Club of East Bethel met at the home of their leader, Gladys Tyler, and reorganized for the coming year. Officers were elected and a program of work planned. The club also voted to give a whist party, the proceeds to be used to help pay the expenses of Haakon Olson, who won a county championship this year on his potatoes, to the State Contest at Orono the last of December. The remainder of the evening was spent with games and popcorn-balls. — Leonard Tyler, Club Reporter.
